Placer County and surrounding cities and counties are all working on similar plan. Sacramento County is on hold at this point and Sutter County has not been approached.

As part of Placer County's commitment to a healthy, safe, and prosperous future for its residents, the county is preparing a Sustainability Plan. The Plan is a comprehensive roadmap that identifies cost-effective measures in order to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and enhance community resiliency.

The Plan will:

- Provide a road map to achieve GHG reductions
- Demonstrate the County's conformance to state laws and regulations
- Implement a general plan
- Identify effective feasible GHG emission reduction measures or new development
- Improve resiliency to climate related hazards.
- This plan is intended to reflect a vision, goals, and actions consistent with Placer County values and continue the commitment to sustain Placer County's quality of life for generations to come.

There are 5 components to the Placer County Sustainability Plan:

- Climate vulnerability in Placer County

- GHG Emissions
- Reducing emissions
- Building resiliency
- Implementation

The GHG Emission Reduction Plan inventories current sources of greenhouse gas emissions in the unincorporated county and outlines a strategy to reduce them in a way that maximizes economic benefits from energy savings and operational cost, improves infrastructure and further benefits the communities of Placer County.

The adaptation Strategy Plan provides adaptation strategies to protect the people, structures, eco-systems and assets in Placer County from exposures of climate change: 1) utilizes vulnerability assessment to better understand the risks associated with the county's unique communities; 2) identifies sensitivities; climate exposures and analyzes impacts and adaptive capacity. 3) outlines adaptive strategies to help mitigate the effects of changing climatic conditions and increase overall resiliency for residents and communities of the County.
